40th Anniversary: West Hollywood is the Epicenter of LA's Culinary and Cocktail Scene

West Hollywood is where culinary trends are born – from inventive vegan to superbly complex mocktails. Don't forget the Moscow Mule was invented right here in West Hollywood. At 40 years old, West Hollywood is just getting started and is continually regarded not only as the birthplace of California cuisine, but the melting pot of the most lavish and decadent culinary and cocktail experiences in Los Angeles. Over the past four decades, the city has given rise to Michelin-rated hot spots, bars offering world-class mixology, and various other hidden gems around nearly every corner of the 1.9 square-mile-radius city. Look for a welcoming neighborhood feel at Bar Next Door or innovative sustainable spirits at Holy Water. Chefs with existing platforms and brick-and-mortar locations continue to flock to West Hollywood to ensure they too have a spot in Southern California's hottest culinary scene. Just ahead of its 40th birthday, West Hollywood welcomed Austin-based Uchi, Michelin-recognized Amour, as well as the first restaurant from Top Chef Middle East & North Africa winner Chef Charbel Hayek, Ladyhawk, inside the Kimpton La Peer Hotel. This modern Eastern Mediterranean concept even serves Middle Eastern-inspired cocktails with a wine list from the ancient world. Locals and tourists alike continue to visit West Hollywood for historic mainstays including Tower Bar, Tail O' the Pup and Dan Tana's, also celebrating an anniversary this year at 60. What is old is new again, as the saying goes – iconic eateries here offer a modern spin on time-tested traditions while maintaining the nostalgia that they are known and celebrated for.
